

Plan Tucson Focus Areas

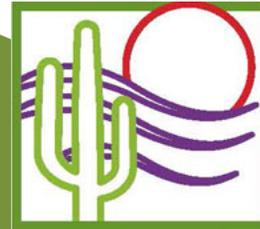

Plan Tucson will be a tool to assist in making decisions for Tucson's future. The framework for the plan consists of three interrelated focus areas, each made up of a series of topics as illustrated below.

The Social and Economic Environment

A city's social and economic environment is where many of the "quality-of-life" determinants are addressed, with particular focus on the human scale. The goals and policies for the Social and Economic Environment are primarily focused on programs and services, while those associated with the Natural Environment and Built Environment chapters reflect the City's authority in the regulation and development of physical resources and the landscape.

- Housing ■ Economic Dev.
- Public Safety ■ Education
- Public Health
- Parks & Recreation
- Arts and Culture
- Urban Agriculture
- Governance & Participation

- Energy & Climate Change
- Water Resources
- Green Infrastructure
- Environmental Quality

The Natural Environment

A healthy environment is critical to ensuring and sustaining a community that is healthy, productive, and resilient. The Natural Environment's goals and policies are important to the future of Tucson's natural environment and the community as a whole.

- Historic Preservation
- Public Infrastructure & Facilities
- Redevelopment & Revitalization
- Land Use, Transportation & Urban Design

The Built Environment

Tucson is not a blank canvas; it is a busy metropolitan area that is built up over many years. The shape of the city and how it functions in the future will be dependent on where and how additional development is accommodated. A sustainable approach to the built environment should result in the realization of goals and the fulfillment of policies of the natural, social and economic environments, which are essential to achieving a city that will appeal to multiple generations.
